E-ISSN: 3139-0668
Volume: I, Issue: II

https://kalingauniversity.ac.in/International-Journal-of-Research-and-Studies

INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL OF RESEARCH AND STUDIES

Month/Year : April-June, 2026 | DOI: https://doi.org/10.5281/zenodo.23431987

RECEIVED 21.05.2026

ACCEPTED 25.05.2026

PUBLISHED 30-06-2026

SUBSCRIPTION-BASED MARKETING MODELS AND CUSTOMER LIFETIME VALUE OPTIMIZATION FOR LIFESTYLE PRODUCTS

Khushi Tiwari - Research Scholar

Kalandika Chomwal - Research Scholar

Kuldeep Sinha - Research Scholar

Department of BBA, Kalinga University, Raipur, Chhattisgarh

Dr. Jitendra Singh - Assistant Professor

Faculty of Commerce & Management, Kalinga University, Raipur, Chhattisgarh

ABSTRACT:

The modern business environment has witnessed the growing adoption of subscription-based marketing models across lifestyle industries such as meal kits, fitness products, personal care, and fashion accessories. These models help companies build long-term customer relationships, generate steady revenue, and maintain customer engagement, while offering consumers convenience, personalization, and regular product delivery. This study examines how subscription-based marketing models influence customer satisfaction, loyalty, and retention. Using a theoretical and analytical approach based on Customer Relationship Management (CRM) frameworks and current subscription economy trends, the study identifies customer satisfaction, personalized offers, and reliable service quality as key factors influencing customer loyalty. The findings suggest that flexible pricing, timely delivery, improved customer experience, and meaningful value-added services can help lifestyle brands strengthen long-term customer relationships and improve retention.

Keywords: Subscription marketing , customer lifetime value , lifestyle products ,customer satisfaction , service quality, customer loyalty, retention strategies , digital marketing.

Introduction

The concept of subscription-based marketing has emerged as one of the most influential business strategies in the digital economy. Traditionally , the relationship between a business and its customer used to transactional , you needed something, you bought it, and that was that. But that dynamic has shifted quite noticeably in recent years. Digitalization, changing lifestyles, and new technologies have all played a role in raising what people expect from the brands they interact with. Convenience, personalization, and continuous access have become the norm rather than the exception.whether it was a fitness app , a monthky skincare box , a wellness supplement plan , the idea is the same , products or service must arrive regularly without the customer having to actively order. brands across grooming , health, fashion ,beauty, have started using this model because it does something the old approach never could , it buildsan ongoing relationship.

From the busioness perspective , the Appeal is all about the customer value lifestyle value , ort CLV. This typically measures how much revenue a single customers generates over time they stay with a brand. The longer the someone stays subscribed , the more valuable they are . keeping an existent customer is almost always cheeper than finding a new one , so automatically , brands focus heavily on satisfaction , service quality and personalized experience to keep people around.

The spread of e commerce and digital payments has only increased all of this. Customers now expect their recommendation tailored to their tastes, parcels at their doorsteps,and their purchases handled automatically. Ai and data analysis have made it easier to dliver all the above expectations, tracking preferences and building subscription  plans that actually feel relevant to individual customers.

For surfer it’s not all smooth sailing , customer cancelation still reamains a constant challenge. Dissatisfaction with poor packaging, product quality ,pricing or delivery can push someone to unsubscribe preety quickly. This is why retention strategies are so central to how subscription businesses operate.

WHAT THE LITERATURE TELLS US

Quite a no, of research has been done on subscription models , customer retention , and service quality and a few consistent themes emerged.

Kotler and keller’s work on relationship marketing is a good starting point. Their argument was that the businesses focused on long term customner relationships rather than just closing sales  which tends to build stronger loyalty and better profitability. Subscription businesses are practically a textbook example of thos on action.

Reinartz and Kumar reinforced the CLV by stating that how easy and cost effective it is to retain existing customer than to attract new customer. For subscription brands, thos is not just theory it directly affects the bottom line every single month.

Gupta and Lehmann found that satisfied customers behave differentaly thast dissatisfied ones in very measurable manner , they refer more , they renew more , and stay engaged longer. This makes a strong front for investing in product and customer support rather than treating them as afterthioughts and neglecting them .

Personalization keeps showing up in research on digital subscriptions as well. People respond better to services that feel designed around them than a generic offering sent to everyone . this is where data driven marketing earns its value.

The SERVQUAL model developed by Zeirthaml, Parasuman, and Berry ia also worth mentioning here . it breaks service quality down into reliability, assurance , tangibility, empathy ,responsiveness. In a subscription context , these comes as like on time delivery , quick resolution of complaints , and consistent in product quality , all pf which shape whether a customer stays or leaves.

Research on discounts and offers shows that they often help with retention , but with caveat. Free trials , loyalty rewards, referral deals do encourage people to stay subscribed but leaning too heavily on promotions can quietly eat up the profits.

While all of this research holds a big value, most of it looks at subscriptions broadly. There is still a little work that focuses specifically on lifestyle products and CLV together which is the gap this study sets out to address.

.

Research Objectives

The study has been conducted with the following objectives:

1. To study the satisfaction level of customers using subscription-based lifestyle products.

2. To study the role of offers and discounts in retaining subscription-based customers.
3. To study the impact of service quality on customer loyalty in subscription-based models.

Research Methodology

The research methodology provides a systematic framework for conducting the study and analyzing the research problem effectively. The present study is descriptive and analytical in nature. The research focuses on understanding customer perceptions regarding subscription-based lifestyle products and identifying factors influencing customer lifetime value optimization.

Nature of Study

The study is descriptive because it attempts to explain customer satisfaction, loyalty, and retention in subscription-based marketing models. It is also analytical because it examines the relationship between service quality, discounts, and customer loyalty.

Sources of Data

The study is based mainly on secondary data collected from books, journals, research articles, online databases, websites, magazines, and published reports related to subscription marketing and customer relationship management.

Scope of the Study

The study focuses on subscription-based lifestyle products such as beauty products, fashion products, wellness subscriptions, personal care items, and fitness-related services. It examines how customer satisfaction and service quality contribute to long-term customer retention.

Importance of the Study

The study is important for marketers, subscription service providers, researchers, and business organizations. It helps businesses understand customer expectations and develop effective strategies for improving customer lifetime value.

Limitations of the Study

The study is based mainly on theoretical analysis and secondary data. Consumer preferences may vary across different demographic groups and regions. Additionally, rapidly changing market trends may influence subscription behaviors over time.

DATA ANALYSIS AND INTERPRETATION

Graph 1: Customer Satisfaction Level with Subscription-Based Lifestyle Products

| Satisfaction Level | Number of Respondents | Percentage |
|---|---|---|
| Highly Satisfied | 42 | 42% |
| Satisfied | 35 | 35% |
| Neutral | 12 | 12% |
| Dissatisfied | 7 | 7% |
| Highly Dissatisfied | 4 | 4% |

Interpretation

The above data indicates that a majority of customers are satisfied with subscription-based lifestyle products. About 42% of respondents are highly satisfied while 35% are satisfied with the services. This shows that subscription-based businesses are successfully meeting customer expectations through convenience, personalization, and product quality. Only a small percentage of customers expressed dissatisfaction, indicating that most customers have positive experiences with subscription services.

Graph 2: Influence of Offers and Discounts on Customer Retention

| Response | Number of Respondents | Percentage |
|---|---|---|
| Strongly Agree | 40 | 40% |
| Agree | 32 | 32% |
| Neutral | 15 | 15% |
| Disagree | 8 | 8% |
| Strongly Disagree | 5 | 5% |

Interpretation

The data shows that offers and discounts play a significant role in customer retention. Around 40% of respondents strongly agree and 32% agree that promotional offers encourage them to continue subscriptions. Customers are attracted toward loyalty rewards, cashback offers, referral benefits, and free trials. The findings suggest that discounts positively influence customer retention and purchasing behavior in subscription-based marketing models.

Graph 3: Impact of Service Quality on Customer Loyalty

| Response | Number of Respondents | Percentage |
|---|---|---|
| Excellent | 38 | 38% |
| Good | 34 | 34% |
| Average | 16 | 16% |
| Poor | 8 | 8% |
| Very Poor | 4 | 4% |

Interpretation

The above analysis indicates that service quality strongly affects customer loyalty. Most respondents rated service quality as excellent or good, which demonstrates that timely delivery, reliable service, and responsive customer support increase customer trust and long-term engagement. Customers are more likely to remain loyal when businesses consistently maintain high-quality services.

Graph 4: Preferred Benefits in Subscription-Based Lifestyle Products

| Preferred Benefit | Number of Respondents | Percentage |
|---|---|---|

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Convenience | 30 | 30% |
| Personalized Products | 28 | 28% |
| Discounts and Offers | 24 | 24% |
| Time Saving | 10 | 10% |
| Premium Experience | 8 | 8% |

Interpretation

The graph reveals that convenience is the most preferred benefit among customers using subscription-based lifestyle products. Personalized product recommendations and discounts are also highly valued by customers. This suggests that businesses should focus on providing customized experiences and convenience-oriented services to improve customer satisfaction and retention.

Subscription-Based Marketing Models

Subscription-based marketing models refer to business systems where customers pay recurring fees to access products or services over a specified period. These models provide companies with recurring revenue while offering customers convenience and continuous access to products.

The subscription economy has expanded rapidly due to technological advancements and digital transformation. Online platforms and mobile applications have simplified subscription management, payment processing, and customer communication. Consumers increasingly prefer predictable and hassle-free purchasing experiences.

Subscription models are widely used in the lifestyle product sector. Beauty box subscriptions deliver skincare and cosmetic products regularly to customers. Fashion subscription services provide curated clothing and accessories according to customer preferences. Fitness applications offer workout plans and wellness guidance through subscription memberships. Meal-kit and health supplement subscriptions have also gained popularity.

One of the key advantages of subscription-based marketing is predictable revenue generation. Businesses can forecast revenue more accurately because customers make recurring payments. This improves financial planning and business stability.

Subscription models also strengthen customer relationships through continuous interaction. Companies regularly communicate with subscribers through personalized recommendations, newsletters, loyalty programs, and customer support services. This continuous engagement enhances brand loyalty.

One underrated advantage of subscription models is how much useful data they generate. Every purchase made by a customer, every update to their preferences, and every interaction they have with products gives businesses a clue about what their consumers want. This allows them to create a better picture of how best to serve their needs, which is used to optimize marketing and curation.

However, having a business that runs on the subscription model does come with challenges. For the majority of organizations, the greatest challenge will be that of churn, which refers to subscriptions that get canceled. The problem is that people unsubscribe for many different reasons. The product may no longer be as high-quality, may become overly generic, or simply may stop being worth paying for. In any case, it is difficult to retain a customer base when there is such a possibility of churn, and therefore companies have to remain competitive.

In essence, it is always the subscription companies that place the customer’s needs first that succeed in their endeavors. The ease of access, reasonable prices, high quality, and good overall experience are all essential aspects of success because without them, no one would want to subscribe again.

Customer Satisfaction in Lifestyle Subscriptions

Satisfaction among customers lies right in the core of any subscription-based business. The happier the customers are with the products they buy, the more they will stick to the subscriptions, recommend the services to others, and develop an emotional relationship with the brand. The opposite side of the coin means that dissatisfied customers leave the brand discreetly, not giving it a chance to do anything about it.

As far as the field of lifestyle products goes, customer satisfaction depends on multiple factors, including product quality, pricing fairness, personalization, packaging, and customer service support.

The concept of personalization needs to be mentioned. In the modern reality, consumers are looking not only for a high-quality product but also a personalized product that looks like a perfect match. A box of cosmetics that suggests products according to the subscribers' skin type would provide much more value for the clients than the identical box delivered to everybody.

The delivery process is also crucially important. For instance, delivering an order late, delivering damaged goods or delivering the wrong order can spoil the relationship with the client quite easily. There are some expectations regarding the delivery process, and they need to be met.

Another key issue is the concept of pricing transparency. Consumers are attracted to subscription services that have understandable price policies and cancellation policies.

The provision of customer support services is vital in creating good experiences. A quick response to customer inquiries, effective solutions, and friendly interactions help build customer trust and loyalty.

The modern consumer has expectations concerning technological convenience as well. Apps, automatic renewals, and customer management systems have become important in boosting customer experiences through technology.

Happy customers become brand ambassadors. The influence of satisfied customers' reviews in business cannot be overlooked when it comes to developing the subscription model.

Importance of Offers and Discount Strategies for Customer Retention

Offers and discounts have played a crucial part in the attraction and retention of subscription-based customers. Promotions are used by many companies to keep their subscribers in order to lower cancellation rates.

Many subscription-based firms offer discounts on their products or services such as initial discounts, free trials, referral programs, loyalty point schemes, cashback, and holiday promotions. All these help in creating value for customers so that they continue to subscribe.

Discount programs prove especially useful for the attraction of new customers. The free trials give them a chance to try products or services for some time and become customers only if they like what they receive during the trial period.

The loyalty programs help in creating repeat customers. Those people who get exclusive perks and benefits from such programs tend to connect emotionally to brands and companies.

Another way that can increase customer retention is the referral discount strategy. By using this technique, existing customers can invite their families and friends to join the service; this will lead to increased connection with the brand.

Yet, it is important to note that business owners have to use their promotion techniques very wisely since the discounts may affect the bottom line negatively and even lead to customer addiction. Customers might only remain loyal while there are some discounts involved.

Instead, businesses should concentrate on increasing the added value for customers rather than deThere are also other psychological determinants of offers' efficacy. People usually view discounted items more favorably. Limited-time offers tend to make consumers react faster and buy immediately.

In lifestyle businesses relying on subscriptions, promotion strategies should reflect customers' tastes and purchasing habits. Tailoring offers according to customers' interests is important.creasing prices.

Service Quality and Customer Loyalty

Service quality is one of the most important factors that impact customer loyalty in subscription-based marketing strategies. Customers should always receive high-quality service throughout the process of subscription.

Customer loyalty is defined as the behavior of customers who are willing to buy from a particular brand on a consistent basis. Customer loyalty plays an important role in ensuring the profitability of any business since loyal customers provide recurring revenues for a company with minimum marketing efforts.

In terms of subscription-based businesses, service quality can be defined as product quality, delivery punctuality, customer service, effective communication, user-friendly websites, and customization.

Reliability is one of the most important dimensions of service quality. Customers expect subscription services to deliver products accurately and on time. Failure to meet expectations may result in customer dissatisfaction and cancellations.

Responsiveness also influences customer loyalty. Quick resolution of complaints and efficient customer service strengthen customer confidence. Customers appreciate businesses that value their concerns and provide immediate assistance.

Assurance refers to the trust and confidence customers develop toward brands. Secure payment systems, transparent policies, and professional communication increase customer trust.

Empathy involves understanding customer needs and providing personalized experiences. Businesses that demonstrate care and attention toward customer preferences create emotional connections with consumers.

Tangibility includes the physical appearance of products, packaging quality, and digital interfaces. Attractive packaging and user-friendly applications improve customer experiences.

High service quality positively impacts customer retention, brand image, and customer advocacy. Loyal customers often recommend subscription services to friends and family, contributing to organic business growth.

Companies that continuously improve service standards can maintain competitive advantages in the subscription economy.

Customer Lifetime Value Optimization

Customer Lifetime Value optimization refers to strategies aimed at maximizing the total value generated from customers throughout their relationship with a business. In subscription-based models, customer lifetime value is highly important because recurring revenue depends on long-term customer retention.

Businesses optimize customer lifetime value by increasing customer satisfaction, reducing churn rates, improving service quality, and enhancing customer engagement. Personalized marketing strategies and loyalty programs also contribute significantly to customer lifetime value.

Data analytics plays a major role in understanding customer behavior. Businesses use customer data to predict purchasing patterns, identify customer preferences, and develop targeted marketing campaigns.

Artificial intelligence and machine learning technologies help businesses recommend relevant products and personalized subscription plans. Personalized experiences increase customer satisfaction and encourage long-term engagement.

Retention strategies are more cost-effective than customer acquisition strategies. Acquiring new customers requires significant marketing investments, whereas retaining existing customers generates higher profitability.

Cross-selling and upselling strategies also contribute to customer lifetime value optimization. Businesses can recommend premium subscription plans or complementary products based on customer preferences.

Customer feedback mechanisms help organizations improve services continuously. Businesses that listen to customer concerns and adapt accordingly create stronger customer relationships.

Flexible subscription plans also improve customer retention. Customers prefer options that allow modifications, pauses, or cancellations without complicated procedures.

Long-term customer relationships increase brand equity and market competitiveness. Companies that successfully optimize customer lifetime value achieve sustainable business growth.

Findings of the Study

The study reveals that subscription-based marketing models are becoming increasingly important in the lifestyle product industry due to changing consumer preferences and digital transformation.

The research indicates that customer satisfaction is strongly influenced by personalization, convenience, product quality, and delivery efficiency. Customers prefer subscription services that provide value-added experiences and flexible options.

The study also finds that offers and discounts play a significant role in attracting and retaining customers. Promotional strategies such as loyalty rewards, referral benefits, and free trials encourage customer engagement and reduce subscription cancellations.

Service quality has a direct impact on customer loyalty. Reliable delivery systems, responsive customer support, and consistent product quality contribute to long-term customer relationships.

The study further reveals that businesses focusing on customer relationship management and personalized experiences achieve higher customer lifetime value.

Technological integration, data analytics, and artificial intelligence have become important tools for improving subscription services and customer satisfaction.

Suggestions

Subscription-based lifestyle businesses should focus on customer-centric marketing strategies to improve customer retention and profitability.

Companies should invest in personalized experiences by utilizing customer data and artificial intelligence technologies. Customized recommendations and curated subscription plans can improve customer satisfaction.

Businesses should maintain high service quality standards, including timely delivery, responsive customer support, and product consistency.

Subscription services should provide flexible pricing and cancellation policies to reduce customer dissatisfaction.

Promotional strategies should focus on value creation rather than excessive discounts. Loyalty programs and exclusive member benefits can strengthen customer relationships.

Organizations should regularly collect customer feedback and implement improvements based on customer expectations.

Digital platforms and mobile applications should be user-friendly and secure to improve customer convenience.

Continuous innovation and market research are essential for maintaining competitiveness in the subscription economy.

Conclusion

Subscription-based marketing models have transformed the modern business environment by emphasizing long-term customer relationships and recurring revenue generation. Lifestyle product companies increasingly rely on subscription systems to provide personalized experiences, convenience, and continuous customer engagement.

After looking at everything this study covers, few of the things stand out clearly. customer satisfaction , consistent service quality and well timed offers . these are the factors that genuinely drives loyalty and also keeps the customer lifetime value growing overtime. companies that make these their priority and takes it seriously ends up holding on to their customers and also makes profit.

Customer satisfaction itself is shaped by a lot of things working together . product quality matters , for sure , but so does how fair the pricing feels , whether the experience is felt personalized, and whether the delivery is done on time and arrives in good condition . when a business keeps all the above sections in mind , customer does not really have a reason to leave. Loyalty , in many ways , is simple the outcome of repeated meetings or better yet ,exceeding what the customer expects.

Discount and promotional offers are an another layer to this. Things like loyalty rewards , referral bonuses , or early renewal deals give customer a real reason to stay subscribed . they create a sense of being valued , which goes a long way. That being said , businesses have to be cautious not to lean in discounts heavily . if promotions are or becomes the only reason for people to stay, that is not really loyalty but price sensitivity. The goal should be to pair attractive offers with genuine consistent value.

Service quality ties everything together. It is not just about delivering a good product but how a company or brand communicates , how quickly it resolves when things go south, and if the customer does feel looked after . trust is built through these small, repeated interactions , and once trust is established, customers tend to stay for the long haul.

Technology also plays an increasingly important role here. Data analytics , smart CRM tools ,AI driven recommendations allow businesses to understand their customers more deeply and respond to their needs in time , companies that uses these tools thoughtfully rather than just collecting data for the sake of it are ones that manage to stay relevant as customer preference shift,

To simplify it . subscription based models are one of the most effective strategies that can be used by lifestyle product businesses in this modern time . but their success depends on how well their company understands and serves its customers . when satisfaction , service and smart retention strategies all come together , the brand becomes something the customers genuinely want to stay connected with.

References

1. Kotler, P., & Keller, K. L. Marketing Management. Pearson Education.
2. Gupta, S., & Lehmann, D. R. Managing Customers as Investments. Wharton School Publishing.
3. Reinartz, W., & Kumar, V. Customer Relationship Management: A Databased Approach.
4. Parasuraman, A., Zeithaml, V. A., & Berry, L. L. SERVQUAL: A Multiple-Item Scale for Measuring Consumer Perceptions of Service Quality.
5. Kumar, V. Customer Lifetime Value: The Path to Profitability.
6. Chaffey, D. Digital Marketing: Strategy, Implementation and Practice.
7. Rust, R. T., Lemon, K. N., & Zeithaml, V. A. Driving Customer Equity.
8. Payne, A. Handbook of CRM: Achieving Excellence in Customer Management.
9. Solomon, M. Consumer Behavior: Buying, Having, and Being.
10. Schiffman, L., & Wisenblit, J. Consumer Behavior.
11. Journal of Marketing Research.
12. International Journal of Business and Management Research.
13. Harvard Business Review Articles on Subscription Economy.
14. Journal of Consumer Marketing.
15. International Journal of Marketing Studies.